ON TARGET FOR CHRIST AT CCCB

WELCOME TO SAINTS SPIRIT

When you walk onto Central's campus these days, you can feel it, a fresh energy pulsing through the halls, the field, and the gym. It's more than excitement about wins and losses (though we love those too). It's a conviction that God is doing something special here in the lives of student-athletes who are discovering their authentic purpose and growing into leaders.

At Central, athletics isn't a side project. It's a central part of our mission to prepare servant leaders for the church and the world. When we talk about the Saints Spirit, we're talking about a posture—a way of approaching competition, training, and team life that is rooted in the kingdom of God. It's about discipline, humility, excellence, and love for one another. We've seen the seeds of this posture start to sprout. Our teams are growing in size and impact. New sports are being launched, and with them, new opportunities to reach students who might never have considered Bible college before.

This fall, you'll see a volleyball program that models heart-led coaching, a soccer team that has become a brotherhood, and a basketball program with deep roots and big dreams. What excites me most is that none of this is accidental. It's the result of prayer, planning, and a commitment to steward this moment with faith. Every coach featured in this edition has a story that points to God's faithfulness and a vision for what's next.

Whether you're a graduate, a donor, a parent, or a friend, you have a role in this movement. Your support—prayers, encouragement, financial gifts—helps our students flourish on and off the field. Thank you for believing in this vision. Together, we're building something that will outlast the final buzzer. Welcome to Saints Spirit.

The shotgun team at Central Christian is far more than an opportunity to refine marksmanship and win competitions. It's a unique platform to equip young men and women spiritually, emotionally, and relationally while students are preparing to live out their futures and their faith, many for the first time on their own. Shotgun sports provides a setting where discipline, focus, and humility are constantly tested. These are qualities that are critical in walking out a vibrant, authentic faith.

Once a week the students meet to practice at a local farm that partners with the shotgun team. There they will develop their reflexes and discipline for events in Trap Shooting, Skeet, Five Stand, and Sporting Clays. Whether it's a car ride to a tournament, a quiet moment after a round, or a meal shared at the end of the day, the shotgun team is about building relationships and making room for vulnerable moments. We've seen how these conversations often lead to prayer, shared scripture, or testimonies that strengthen not only individual students but the team as a whole.

One of the scriptures that comes to mind is Colossians 3:23: "Whatever you do, work at it with all your heart, as working for the Lord..." In a sport that demands patience, practice, and perseverance, this verse reminds our athletes that their efforts on the range are part of their witness. We emphasize excellence, not for accolades, but as a form of worship, a reflection of their commitment to honor God with their talents.

Moreover, shotgun sports teach valuable life lessons: how to respond to failure, how to encourage others, and how to remain steady under pressure. We regularly challenge our team to apply those lessons to their faith journey. Just as a shooter must reset after a missed target, we talk about grace—how God invites us to get back up, refocus, and keep pursuing Him even after setbacks.

Our team prayer circles before competitions remind us that we are a family, united not just by shared goals, but by shared faith. The bonds formed through hours of training and traveling together often blossom into lasting friendships and accountability relationships that will extend well beyond their college years.

Shotgun sports has become a ministry, one clay, one conversation, one student at a time.

VOLLEYBALL AND BEYOND:

THE HEART OF KINGDOM COACHING

I had the best volleyball coach when I was a freshman in high school—someone who also happened to be my first-grade teacher. We’ve stayed in touch through the years and I even had the honor of singing at her wedding when she got remarried. She is the sweetest woman—someone who’s always led with her faith and made me believe in myself. Pair that influence with a mom who taught me to work hard, left me handwritten notes of encouragement, and constantly reminded me to “let go and let God,” it’s no surprise that I’ve grown into someone who leads with faith, emotion, and heart. That’s what I want to bring to my team. I want my girls to feel seen, heard, cared for, and loved. I want them to know they can come to me with anything and everything.

When I went to college, I didn’t always have someone in my corner—and now, I get to be that person for them. I remember going to church alone every Sunday. It was hard and lonely, but I knew God had me there for a reason: to grow in my faith, build confidence, and learn to lean on Him. I don’t ever want my athletes, or any student for that matter, to feel alone like that. There are many places these young women could have chosen to continue their education and athletic journey. The fact that they chose Central adds a weight to my shoulders. Their parents trust us to care for them, and I take that responsibility seriously. It’s a promise I make—and one I intend to keep while they’re part of this team and this campus. College is a time of incredible growth and transition. I want to walk with them through it—help them grow in their faith, develop in the game of volleyball, and be a constant source of support whenever they need it.

More than anything, I’m grateful for these girls who are choosing to buy into something new. They’re investing in their faith. They’re investing in each other. And they’re choosing something hard. Because of that, I owe it to them to give everything I have—on and off the court. Every girl is different. Each one is at a different place in her life. I want to be the kind of coach who meets them where they are and helps them along the way. I love building and nurturing those relationships. I’m here for that—because they show up for me, too.

CCCB Men's Soccer LEADING MEN INTO A NEW CHAPTER

The heart of being a soccer coach is Love; Love for soccer, Love for the team, and - most importantly - Love for each and every player. As Christians, we do this because Christ first loved us. I get to be in a position to make an impact in the lives of 26 young men, and that is the biggest privilege in coaching. In a new place, with a new challenge, and in a very formative period, working with these young men brings some of the greatest joy to me that I could imagine. It is difficult managing conflicting personalities, personal issues, different desires to grow, and everything in between for 26 young individuals. But, the foundations for making an impact on each player are the same.

Prayer is the direct connection we have to God and is often overlooked although it is an incredibly powerful tool. "Lord, help me connect with this person - how can I speak to him, please show me - I am broken. Please help me to put aside my own shortcomings and have the ability to work in the best way with him."

These are all things I've found myself asking God to work on, in me, as I interact with my team. Beyond that, finding the right relational spot for each player is a huge part. For some, I'm just a coach. For others, a mentor, a leader, or even a confidant. I don't think about myself as a father figure due to my age, but I've found that for a few I have been able to overlap with some duties that create that dynamic with them. For whatever type of relationship I have with each player, I'm grateful for it. What can we do to lead each player in their personal and spiritual development? That is a question I find myself asking often. I found part of the answer by removing myself in some capacities, as counterintuitive as it may sound. Some of the best growth that I saw in my players was when our captain took over a small group and led it on his own. I was still able to mentor each individual, but he took over some responsibility to help guide his teammates. The benefits for our player who led were possibly even greater than those that he led. The growth I saw in him taking ownership for the leadership of his peers made me unbelievably proud.

Chase Gwynn
Head Men's Soccer Coach

Having hard conversations with players is a responsibility every coach has, being in a position of trust with them. In order to grow, sometimes plants have to be pruned. There have been times I've had to have those hard conversations. I hope that those bring about fruit that they can see in the end. We can't do it alone though. Myself, Coach Barry Richardson, and others with the team rely on the support of the community around us. The best thing we ask for is prayer for our players. Outside of that, helping with resources to allow us to continue to make our team the best place to grow and compete at a collegiate level are always needed.

SAINTS MENS HOOPS ROOTED IN THE GAME

My very first memory of “Central Basketball” had to be around 1983–84 when I was about four or five years old. My parents had moved our family back to Moberly, and I remember them bringing me to a basketball game. I was pretty young, so memories blur over time, but two things stood out from that night: 1. The white uniforms absolutely glowing under the bright can lights in the “ACTion Center,” and 2. I’m pretty certain the “Heralds” ran onto the floor to the tune of Kool and the Gang’s “Celebration.” Surprisingly, I don’t remember the bright orange carpet playing surface. I spent so much more time in this gym from grade school through high school that it probably became normal to me.

Fast forward to 1998 when I came in as a student, the gym looked nearly the same, except the carpet floor had been replaced by vinyl. There was no branding—no logos, no school name, no banners, and even the strip around the out-of-bounds was navy blue instead of our “crimson” red. Basketball was every bit an extracurricular that came after everything else. We even lost the gym for practices and games from early November through December due to the Living Christmas Tree production. As a student, I was frustrated. I can’t count how many times I had shoes in hand walking over to Pelfrey Hall to shoot around, only to have my plans crushed when I saw tables and chairs set up for some event.

Back then, sports existed to provide a God-honoring way for ministry-minded students to compete against similar institutions. My immature self didn’t like that nearly everything else took priority over basketball, but over time, I began to understand it. It taught me humility. We wanted to win, but the wins didn’t come often. The college wasn’t doing much recruiting in the first 50 years. Coaches didn’t get paid much and changed often. Teams were made from the student body which often didn’t have the talent, experience, or depth to win many games. There were talented basketball players like Jerry Wetrich, Kim Mallette, Kelly Burton, Dave Ferneau, Troy Easley, and Andrew Hodges, but they didn’t always have a strong supporting cast. A few schools scraped rosters together like we did, but others in our league had been assembling championship-caliber teams in multiple sports for decades. We rarely beat Manhattan, Grace, or Ozark, and especially not powerhouses outside our conference.

Around the mid-to-late 2000s, traditional Bible colleges realized athletic programs, especially basketball, could serve as both outreach and enrollment drivers. Programs grew more competitive. If you didn’t recruit, you couldn’t compete, and eventually you wouldn’t have a team. I began coaching at Central in 2007. Aside from four years at an NAIA program in Kentucky, the rest have been here. Faith is still a priority. It’s just as important as in the early days, but the world and the recruiting pool have changed, so we’ve had to adjust. The NIL era, the transfer portal, and digital media have changed the game. Even small Christian colleges must think about branding, social media strategy, and how to keep players from being lured away with better exposure or deals.

We’re intentionally using athletics as a ministry tool, but the goal is still the same: to train kids how to reach a world that doesn’t know Christ. Some student-athletes start as business majors and later develop a passion for ministry. Some become youth ministers. Others now impact the Kingdom from teaching or coaching positions in public schools. We’ve had six of our men’s basketball players baptized in the last three years. We still do devotionals before games and pray with opponents afterward. Behind every win or loss is an opportunity to remind young men that their identity isn’t found on the scoreboard, but in Christ. As long as Central continues to pursue coaches and leaders who see basketball as more than a game, like those I learned from in my time at Central, then God’s light will continue to shine, on and off the court.

^ Exhibition # Senior Day

This spring, I had the privilege of witnessing something truly powerful. Myself, along with several of our men's and women's basketball players stepped off the court and into a calling far greater than competition. On a mission trip to the Dominican Republic, our Saints didn't just bring their basketball skills, they brought their hearts. They played with children at the local school, painted a house, prayed with families, led devotionals, and served communities in meaningful ways.

But what left the deepest impact were the in-between moments; the conversations, the shared smiles, and the quiet acts of kindness. Lives were transformed, starting with our own. What struck me most was the simplicity and power of a shared game. Same ball, different hoop. Different language, same passion. It was a reminder that basketball and sports in general are universal connectors. And when paired with the gospel and a posture of humility, they become powerful tools for transformation. Our athletes experienced what it means to step outside their comfort zones, to engage with people who live differently from us, and to realize that ministry doesn't require anything extraordinary. It requires presence. It requires love. And most of all, it requires a willing heart. As the Athletic Director at Central Christian College of the Bible, my desire is to see this kind of impact multiplied across all our programs. What our basketball players experienced is what I believe Saints Athletics can and should embody, mission through sport. I want us to be known not just for how we perform, but for how we posture ourselves; with humility, service, and Christ at the center of everything we do. On the court, on the field, in the classroom, and in our communities. This trip reminded me that we don't have to wait for international travel to be missional. Every practice, every game, and every team meeting is an opportunity to build character, serve one another, and lead with purpose.

My vision as the Athletic Director is to walk alongside our coaches as we build more than teams. We're building leaders and disciple makers, not just competitors. Coaches who shepherd. Players who serve. Programs that win with character and lose with grace. I want every coach and athlete here to see that mission isn't just a trip, it's a lifestyle. It begins with how we practice, how we treat one another, and the posture we carry into every game. My prayer is that we become teams who compete with excellence, but love even more boldly. Our time in the DR reminded us that when we surrender the game to God, it becomes a platform for eternity. And that's the kind of athletics we are building here at Central; missional, meaningful, and rooted in Christ.

WOMEN'S SOCCER

Coming Fall of 2026

During my playing days as a goalkeeper at Central, I was known for being a fierce competitor. Someone who never backed down and gave 100% effort until the final whistle. I played every game with a level of unmatched intensity rooted in toughness, doing whatever it took to protect the goal and support my team. That competitive fire pushed me to give my all in every save, every challenge, and every moment on the field. It's this same relentless mindset that I bring to coaching and leadership, always pushing to raise the bar and never settling for less than our best. Goalkeepers are a different breed. That role demands grit, focus, and relentless competitiveness, traits that were instilled in me from a young age.

My parents raised me with a never-give-up mentality that is rooted in Christ, and that mindset has shaped every part of my journey. It's how I play, how I coach, how I lead, and ultimately how I live my life each day. That same drive is exactly what I'm bringing to Central as the head coach of the women's program. I'm not here to try, I'm here to compete and build a program that stands. I've been part of this campus for years. I played here. I've coached here. I understand the culture, the challenges, and the potential. This isn't about putting a team on the field and hoping it sticks. It's about creating a standard, developing an identity, and building something that players want to be a part of. We're creating a foundation that lasts.

What makes me uniquely suited for this is that I don't just care about getting a team on the field. I care about getting it right. That means recruiting the right players, building a team identity, and surrounding the program with support that ensures we're not just competing, but growing every year. That puts me in a position to lead this the right way. Not with a short-term mindset, but with a long-term plan. Goalkeepers don't shy away from pressure—we live in it. And I'm ready to take that same mindset into building a Women's Soccer program at Central that finally lasts. Not just for 2026, but for good. -Coach Barry Richardson

Facility Upgrades

We are excited to share two facility upgrades that were completed over the summer. These areas were aimed at improving both the performance space and the day-to-day experience for our student-athletes. In response to ongoing feedback from visiting coaches, officials, and players, the limited clearance on the north side of the gym had to be addressed. The small sideline created safety concerns for those playing and the players on the sideline, and it also impacted game flow. Players often found themselves stepping out of bounds, getting their feet stepped on, or getting plowed into simply due to the tight space. Referees struggled to maintain optimal positioning and have even been tripped. The sideline space in our main gym was increased from 35 inches to just over 6 feet. This expansion exceeds the 3-foot minimum recommended by national standards and brings us closer to NCAA and NCCAA expectations, ultimately creating a safer, more competitive environment. The entire stage and frame have been repainted to a sleek, modern black color. This change enhances the look of the Ferneau Center, and will be noticed by more than athletes.

In addition to the gym upgrades, we are refreshing our lower-level locker rooms to better serve our athletes. Updates include brand-new sinks and counter-tops, the addition of shower partitions, and the creation of private dressing and shower areas to replace the outdated gang-style layout. The space will also receive fresh paint, new lighting, updated ceiling tiles, and improved ventilation. We are also excited to add two temporary locker rooms on the first floor that will serve as our home locker rooms and an athletic lounge, that will house our trophies and awards. These enhancements reflect our ongoing commitment to the well-being of our athletes both on and off the court and field. Whether it's providing safer playing conditions or a more comfortable and private locker room environment, we're investing in upgrades that support performance, health, and team pride.

HELP FUEL THE MISSION

At Central, we believe athletes are uniquely wired to make an impact. That's why the "E" (experience) in our SEAL Scholarship honors the dedication built through high school athletics. High School students who are dedicated to a team during their junior or senior years can receive a $2,000 scholarship to help launch their college journey. On campus, you'll find that same deep commitment. They're often the first ones to turn the lights on in the gym or weight room—and in the chapel for early morning Bible study and devotions. Their discipline helps make this campus feel alive with purpose and faith. They embody Paul's words about running the race to win a crown that lasts, growing stronger in Christ as they grow in skill and character. When you support athletics, you're investing in young men and women who inspire all of us to train, grow, and lead with purpose.
